In many communities throughout the United States there are citizens for whom English is a second language or those who simply prefer to communicate in a language other than English. When these individuals vote, United States law may afford them special language assistance. For this reason, the U.S. Election Assistance Commission and Democracy Fund Voice are hosting this event to bring together election officials, advocates, other experts to share ideas, techniques and resources all in service of meeting voters' needs.

Workshop Sessions

Session 1: Maximizing Language Services and Election Materials

Hear analysis on the current state of language services options, with insight from work at the federal level. The group will seek to understand gaps in information and help generate ideas on ways to improve election material design.

Facilitator - Stacey Scholl, Senior Program Associate, Democracy Fund Voice

Taapsi Ramchandani, Civic Anthropologist, Center for Civic Design
Priscilla Huang, Consultant and Former Senior Advisor to the White House Initiative on Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders

Session 2: Programming Voting Equipment

Easily one of the most important elements of administering an election, “equipment” can make or break a voter’s experience. Programming equipment to display more than one language accurately and effectively is key to ensuring a voter correctly and efficiently casts their ballot.

Facilitator - Ryan Macias, Certification Program Specialist, U.S. Election Assistance Commission

Session 3: Poll Place Design for Language Assistance

Step into the mock polling place, where you can see how other jurisdictions are displaying information for voters in multiple languages.

Facilitator - Natalie Adona, Research Associate, Democracy Fund Voice
Shobhana Johri Verma, Director of South Asian Outreach, Chicago Board of Election Commissioners
Cameron Sasnett, General Registrar, Fairfax County Virginia

3:40 - 3:50 pm Break

3:50 - 4:55 pm PANEL: Providing Language Assistance on a Budget

Few states and counties have extra resources or time to experiment or undertake work without clear benefits or returns. How can jurisdictions take calculated steps to maximize the resources they do have?

Matt Masterson, Chair, U.S. Election Assistance Commission
Craig Latimer, Supervisor of Elections, Hillsborough County, Florida
Dr. Gilberto Zelaya, Community Outreach Liaison, Montgomery County, Maryland Board of Elections
James Tucker, Pro Bono Voting Rights Counsel for the Native American Rights Fund
